for a period of time, but not an e-commerce model. Please follow up with an example of what I am looking for in order to include it as part of the question. A: As mentioned by @Colin Taylor, the example would be to use some available service which already uses the open source code like Remix platform. Remix is an open source development platform that provides you with free-to-use code and a hosting environment, all in one place. The 'tutorials' contain a wealth of information on using open source code and you could easily combine both. As for using the code, Remix provides you with 2 options; You can compile the code in their IDE (Interactive Development Environment) and make minor changes or customisations to the code. You can also use the Remix IDE to create a new project and add the code to it. In terms of hosting, Remix provides you with a standard web hosting environment, which is more than sufficient for you to start coding. You can choose to pay for additional services or upgrade to a paid account, but you will have to add this yourself. Remix runs with a Linux-based cloud operating system, Apache HTTP Server (web server) and MySQL database. If you have not looked at any of these open source platforms, I would recommend Remix and its accompanying tutorials. The plaintiffs' primary claim is that the city's actions, and inactions, in the face of alleged official misconduct constituted a violation of due process and equal protection. On the evidence, the only findings of such a violation were based on a theory of conspiracy which the district court correctly ruled the plaintiffs had no factual basis for advancing and that was not the basis on 82157476af
